Helping with the Hurricane Harvey Relief Effort

With nearly 4.5 feet of rain and 130 mph winds, Hurricane Harvey propelled a disaster response that was the largest in Texas state history. Neighbors, strangers, nonprofit organizations and governments at all levels joined together to mount an extraordinary effort to save lives and meet the needs of thousands of people who suffered from the storm and subsequent flooding. It was Texans helping Texans, aided by people who came to Texas from all parts of the nation.

Before the storm made landfall near Rockport on Friday, August 25, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) had pre-positioned supplies and personnel in the Texas, ready to join the Texas Division of Emergency Management, local agencies, nonprofit and faith-based organizations and the private sector in responding to the devastation caused by the storm. Within days, the number of FEMA employees, other federal agencies, and the National Guard deployed topped 31,000.

That weekend, the Looney & Conrad, P.C. team sprang into action when Operations Manager Cynthia Zamora announced we would assist victims. With a sign outside our office in Hempstead (Our Houston office building was closed due to massive flooding), donations began pouring in.

Using several flatbed trailers, donations were taken to Port Lavaca by our team.

Thank you to everyone who donated to this tremendous relief effort and for making a difference.
